

ROBERTSON SPRINTS FAST

RUNS 300 YARDS IN 32 2-3 SECONDS INDOORS.

Mac Beats the Record but Is Not Made in Open Competition—Bethesda Church Team Wins at Sunday School League Games in Thirteenth Regiment.

Lawson Robertson of the Irish-American A. C. broke the world's record for 300 yards indoors at the Thirteenth Regiment Armory last night, but his time, 32 2-3 seconds, was not counted as a new mark because it was not made in open competition. The record was the indoor hand of the Sunday School Athletic League of Brooklyn.

Robertson started from scratch in the 300 yard handicap, run for members of the Thirteenth Regiment. The limit men had twenty yards, but Robertson ran the race in this load down and was not more than a yard. J. T. Bohan of the Seventh Company was second and L. Pierce of the Fifth Company third.

The world's record for 300 yards indoors is 32 2-3 seconds and is held by L. Roy Dorland of the Pastime A. C.

The team from Bethesda Church won the meet with a point score of 20. Hanson Place M. C. was second with 19, Tompkins Avenue Congregational third with 18 points, and Central Congregational fourth with 12 points. Between seven and eight hundred entries were received for the twenty-foot events. Four championship events were included on the programme, and the points for these will count for the championship trophy.

OXYGEN A FACTOR IN FIGHT.

Jeannette Beats MacVey in Forty-ninth Round of Brutal Encounter.

Special Cable Dispatch to THE SUN.

PARIS, April 17.—By virtue of oxygen pumped into them by their seconds Jeannette and MacVey, who were assisted by through forty-eight rounds of a brutal and plucky fight here to-night. At the opening of the forty-ninth round MacVey, his face utterly demoralized by an expression of helpless agony that distorted what remained of his features, signified that he was unable to continue, whereupon the referee declared Jeannette the winner.

The fight was to a finish for a purse of 30,000 francs. About 2,400 persons, a large majority of them foreigners, were present, less than half the number who attended the match between the two on February 20, when MacVey got the decision after a fight that was under the general suspicion of being fixed. To-night's fight was on a level with the previous one, in which Jeannette figured as a practitioner of forbearance, shaking hands with his helpless adversary, when he might apparently have punished him, he himself was knocked down three times in succession and was saved only by the bell.

For the next few rounds he survived only by the liberal employment of oxygen. He fell several times during the fight, but he was able to get up each time. He displayed remarkable powers of recuperation, and in the last ten rounds made a chopping block of his opponent, although he lacked the power to deliver a knockout or even achieve a straight knockdown. MacVey's surrender, however, was justified as it was impossible in his condition that he could win.

The contest will not improve the standing of either man. MacVey showed himself slow and lacking in ability to take advantage of openings, while Jeannette demonstrated his lack of a winning punch. As an exhibition of courage and endurance, and stalling on MacVey's part, the fight was a record. The referee, however, was of no help to either man, as he was devoid of energy, the men exhibiting an almost friendly spirit throughout the fight.

The contest opened briskly. Jeannette using a straight left blow. He showed the greater cleverness until the fifth round, when Sam knocked him down, after which both fought cautiously until the fourteenth round, when Sam's right eye was swollen. At the sixteenth round Jeannette changed his style of fighting and forced Sam to the ropes. In the seventeenth round he secured a certain winner unless for a chance knock-out.

During the nineteenth round, when Jeannette seemed to have Sam at his mercy, Sam sent him down three times for nine, eight and six seconds. After the round oxygen was administered to Jeannette, and the dose was repeated in varying quantities until the last round, when Jeannette went down again for six seconds in the twenty-first round. Sam had the best of it until the twenty-second round, when Jeannette went down again for eight seconds. He was down for the same time in the twenty-third round, when Sam was too weak to put him up.

In the thirty-third round both slipped on water in Joe's corner and went to the floor. Subsequently Joe cleverly fought Sam into the same corner, hoping to advantage by a similar accident. In the forty-second round and until the end, the fight was a drawing match. Sam did not need to help him as it did Jeannette.

Consider These Proposals Fairly

Proposals for relieving the choked condition of New York's transit lines are before the public.

Our proposal is to build another subway, with private capital, which after a period of years will become the property of the city—FREE.

Our proposal, involves not a penny of the city's money, or the city's credit—either now or later.

We ask:

- 1.—To be allowed to build a two-track express subway from 42d Street to the Bronx on the East Side.
- 2.—To be allowed to build a two-track express subway from 42d Street to the Battery on the West Side.

The need is for express subways. At first these two new subways will be but two-tracked. Later, when traffic warrants, they will be four-tracked for local business.

These two subways, with the present subway, will give the city a complete East Side subway and a complete West Side subway, with a connecting link on 42d Street.

These two subways we ask to build at our own expense—and at the expiration of our present lease, we will turn them over to the city free.

Under our plan the city will, without expense, come into the possession of a complete, unified subway system, smooth running and well organized.

These subways will afford relief in the future. There is need for relief right now.

So we ask:

- 3.—To be allowed to build an express track on both the Second and Third Avenue elevated lines. This would give two new express lines to the Bronx, which could be opened to the public in eighteen months.

The transit problem is everybody's problem. It is your problem.

Our three proposals, in writing, are before the proper authorities. We are anxious to do our utmost to relieve conditions.

We are ready to ACT.

DIXIE II'S ENGINES FAILED.

Wolsley a Well Built Boat—Standard Criticized.

In the first race in which the Dixie II took part at Monaco she was badly beaten by the Wolsley-Siddeley and the Panhard. The latter, however, was not a fair competitor. The Dixie II, which was won by the Wolsley-Siddeley in 40 minutes 45 seconds, was the Panhard second in 49 minutes 14 seconds. According to the Fachting World the water was very rough in the time of the Dixie II, was 1 hour 28 minutes 25 seconds. "It is a great mistake," says the Fachting World, "to imagine that the Mediterranean is a lake, but it takes time to run this fast home to some builders of high powered craft with a light construction standard. The second of the American string could not start. She may be all right on Orster Bay, but in these waters it runs at high speed on her present lines she would be an absolute death trap. A change to a more conservative line, however, has not been greatly increased thereby; the men are now at work broadening her beam, so as to enable her to take part in the next big international race which is being planned for the summer of 1907. She failed to start in that race because of a cracked cylinder.

Referring to the Wolsley-Siddeley that paper says: "This year a new fifteen footer launch was built to the order of the Duke of Westminster to compete in the unlimited power class. The hull was built by Saunders of Cowes on the Saunders patent system of construction, with a slight modification of the original patent. She has been constructed on the three skin principle, the chief departure being that the hull is covered with the timbers as well as sewn together with copper wire. As regards design, the hull is the extra hull built by the Wolsley-Siddeley, which is a very good one; all against 12 meters in last year's boat, roughly speaking, an additional 12 meters in length. The hull is built throughout, the water lines forward being practically straight for a distance of 17 feet aft of the stern. The hull is built in an easy and the underbody of the hull is a considerable flatter than was the case in the 1905 model.

For her whole length of 50 feet she is built without a butt, and altogether a magnificent example of British boat construction. The total weight of the hull, result of the hull built by Saunders of Cowes, including engine bearers, is less than 19 hundredweight. In regard to the machinery, the boat is built on the Saunders patent system, the two units are mounted side by side, with the valves on the inner side of each motor, the exhaust from both being discharged into a single pipe running down the middle of the boat. The motors are each of twelve cylinders, as compared with two eight cylinder motors in last year's installation, and are individually credited with being capable of developing 30 horse-power. The distribution of the cylinders is in the center of the engine, the cylinders being fore and aft of them. The helmsman's seat is placed forward of the engine.

The boat was built by Saunders of Cowes on the Saunders patent system of construction, with a slight modification of the original patent. She has been constructed on the three skin principle, the chief departure being that the hull is covered with the timbers as well as sewn together with copper wire. As regards design, the hull is the extra hull built by the Wolsley-Siddeley, which is a very good one; all against 12 meters in last year's boat, roughly speaking, an additional 12 meters in length. The hull is built throughout, the water lines forward being practically straight for a distance of 17 feet aft of the stern. The hull is built in an easy and the underbody of the hull is a considerable flatter than was the case in the 1905 model.

For her whole length of 50 feet she is built without a butt, and altogether a magnificent example of British boat construction. The total weight of the hull, result of the hull built by Saunders of Cowes, including engine bearers, is less than 19 hundredweight. In regard to the machinery, the boat is built on the Saunders patent system, the two units are mounted side by side, with the valves on the inner side of each motor, the exhaust from both being discharged into a single pipe running down the middle of the boat. The motors are each of twelve cylinders, as compared with two eight cylinder motors in last year's installation, and are individually credited with being capable of developing
